We are an educational platform with a simple goal: to educate and inform the everyday man and woman on various aspects of finance and economics, in a manner that makes it easy to understand and apply to ordinary life, ultimately 'Making finance simple'.

We believe that finance and economics should be made simple so everyone can understand and grasp the concepts no matter their background. What makes the difference is the way in which it is communicated. This is where Economic Street can help.

We want to encourage young adults to be financially intelligent and responsible so they can face and overcome the challenging landscape of today's society. We aim to deliver this using our professional knowledge and a creative, engaging approach.

Purpose

From personal experience, we noticed that neither we nor most of our friends or people we encountered were adequately prepared for the challenges at university, specifically in this instance, the financial aspects.

We were rather fortunate that we had a natural financial inclination, aided by our choice of degree (Economics), which softened our landing. However, many of our friends were not in the same position, and soon fell into bad financial practices, such as: overdraft and credit card spending, and failure to pay financial obligations like rent.

In response to this, we have created a financial series for university students, to equip them with the practical skills and information needed to successfully navigate university life.

The hope is that participants will adapt sound financial habits, and in turn, avoid some of the pitfalls and difficulties that can arise later in life from poor financial decisions, such as rejected loan applications (car, business, mortgage etc.) and bankruptcy.

Outcomes

Participants will:

- ✓ Receive a good grounding in the main concepts of money management.
- ✓ Be challenged to consider and formulate a range of financial and economic problems they could face, within context of own lifestyle.
- ✓ Be encouraged to make better financial choices, particularly around current spending habits.

Our Modules cover aspects such as personal finance, understanding the economy, and the basics of investing .
